THE HEADS OF THE STATE.

It was a distinguished audience which attended the dedication. Governor Montague, head of the executive department of the State, was in the audience; Lieutenant-Governor Willard, head of the legislative department, was present. He lives at Fairfax Courthouse, Judge Keith, president of the Court of Appeals and the head of the judicial department, came over from his home in Fauquier. Autorney-General Anderson, the head of the bar of the State, was the chief orator. There has not been a gathering anywhere in Virginia in a long time in which the entire power of the State was so, nearly represented.

There were many other distinguished visitors, including General Eppa Hunton, commander of the old Eighth infantry, largely made up of the men of Fairfax. Colonel Morton Marye, auditor of public accounts of Virginia, and commander of the immortal Seventeenth Virginia, to which was attached the Warrenton Rifles, which Marr commanded when he lost his life; Judge D. A. Grimsley, of Manasas, a gallant major in the Confederate army, Hoy, John Goode, spidier and statesman; Major Robert T. Hunter of Gordon's staff; Judge George L. Christita, commander-in-chief of the Confederate attains and commander of the Confederate o

Commander J. N. Ballard, of Marr Camp, introduced Rev. E. Meade, chaplan, who made the opening prayer, and at its conclusion the commander presented Hon, R. Walton Moore, the son of a Confederate, as permanent chairman. In addressing the chair, Mr. Moore spoke briefly, welcoming the assemblage, He went into the war history of Fairfax, which he termed the Borderland of the Confederacy, not a square mile of whose territory had not trembled beneath the tread of contending armies. He recalled to the minds of the veterans the names of a dozen battles fought on Fairfax soil, and paid a high tribute to Mr. Anderson, who won at Manasses "that hadge of knighthood which he will ever wear as he wears the flower of knighthood in his heart." Mr. Moore also caused applause by his allusion to General Eppa Hunton, who sat in front of him close to the stand, as "the hero of Ball's Bluff,"

"Memories so throng upon us as we consider the history of Fairfax," said Mr. Moore, "that we come to believe the past alone is real and the present is only a dream"!

Andderson's Speech.

There was prolonged applause at the conclusion of the reading, and after more music Mr. Moore in a few happy sentences introduced Attorney-General Anderson as the orator of the day.

"Orderly" Anderson, he was called by Mr. Moore, who said he had it from Mr. Anderson's own lips that that was the only title he ever owned.

There was a salve of applause as Mr. Anderson rose. Mr. Anderson opened his speech with some historical data submitted in substantiation of the claim that Captain Marr was the, first Confederate soldier killed in action. It had generally been claimed that the first Confederate to lose his life was Private H. L. Wyatt, of North Capolina, who was killed at the battle of Bethel. But Bettell was fought on June 10, 1881, while Cap-

Bethel, but three days after the fight at Fairfax Courthouse.

The orator very briefly sketched the career of Captain Marr. Born at War-renton. Fauquier county, May 27, 1825, member of the Secession Convention as

Mr. Anderson said Captan Marr came from a long line of soldiers. His grandfather was a surgeon's mate in the Continental army, and as such dressed the wound of General Latayette at Brandywine, and remained with him all night-facts recalled by Lafayette when he visited Virginia in 1825 and again met the man who had probably saved his life.

Mr. Anderson spoke for about an hour-and twenty minutes. There was tre-mendous and prolonged applause at the conclusion of the oration, more music, and then there were loud calls for "Mon-tugue." The Governor was seated in the audience a short distance away, and he received an ovation of applause as he

Governor Montague said he could not undertake to make addenda to the remarkable address, to which he had just listened. He said it had been an inspiration to him and he believed the memories of what Virginians had accomplished in the great struggle should inspire us all "the Keep Virginia at the altitude, to which she was raised by the Virginia soldier."

"The soldiers of the Confederacy," said the Governor, "followed their great commanders not so much because of blind love, but because of abiding faith in their genius and their ability to lead them."

After the exercises, the ladies of Fairfax, carrying great masses of roses, and the graves of the sleeping soldiers.

But the last feature of the day was the singing of national airs by the ladies and gentlemen on the veranda at Captain the Virginia Court of Appeals, and some Trouble Grew Out of Importation of Virginia Negroes to Take Place of Strikers. "

(By Associated Press.) panies of militia were to-day ordered to proceed to Hanging Rock, near Ironton, on the Ohio River.
With Colonel A. C. Thomason in com mand, the companies left at once for Hanging Rock on a special train. The sheriff of Lawrence county to-day wired the attorney-general, making a request for military aid at Hanging Rock. The sheriff asked that an entire battalion be sent forthwith as there was every indication that there might be a bloody outbreak at any moment. The trouble grows out of the importation of negroes from Virginia to take the places of striking furnace men.

arrest of James Fuller, a young striker, suspected of having shot Superintendent Wm. Jeftries, of the Hanging Rock Company, was what brought the ill feeling between the strikers and strike-breakers to such a point to-day that troops were called for by Sherlif Payne. The strikers to-day began parading the streets, carrying rifles and threatening the non-union men wherever found, especially the colored men, who had taken the places of strikers in the furnaces. The strike-breakers were also armed. arrest of James Fuller, a young striker,

On Monday night an attack was made on an old church, where a party of non-unionists had taken refuge and two hundred shots were exchanged. Later Superintendent Jeffries, of the Hamilton Furnace, was shot, but not seriously hurt. There have been few casualties so far, considering the extent of the shooting. Within five hours after the order for troops to proceed to Hanging Rock was issued four companies of militia from Ironton, Portsmouth, Gallipolis and Manchester were on the scene and the strikers had been dispersed.

Colonel Thomason, in command of the troops, reported to-night that perfect order had been restored and that there was no fear of further trouble to-night.
